Guidance on Confidentiality in Student Health and Welfare

1. Introduction

This document is intended for all those involved in student health and welfare for whom confidentiality might be an issue, and is designed to promote greater consistency in the way individual cases are handled. "Health" covers both physical and mental health. This guidance applies to all students studying at Trinity including those on a year abroad or on overseas research trips. The Director of Student Welfare and support Services can advise colleagues on a no-names basis.

2. General Principles

Respect for confidentiality

2.1 A general respect for privacy means that matters relating to the health and welfare of individuals must be treated as confidential. Whilst sharing information might seem the most helpful response, students are adults and the confidentiality of their data must be maintained, and information not shared without consent.

2.2 Those advising students should make it clear at the outset of a discussion whether the content is to be confidential and the extent of the confidentiality to be afforded to any disclosures.

2.3 When discussing confidentiality with students, the following should be made clear:

- Confidentiality will be respected, wherever possible;
- Consent will be sought, wherever possible, to any onward disclosure of information; and
- There are limited circumstances in which information might be shared with a third party, taking account of the duty of care which may be owed to the individual and/or others, or where an individual lacks capacity to consent.

Seeking consent

2.4 Those involved in advising students should, where possible, seek the consent of the individual for the onward disclosure of relevant information to those with a clear need to know. Where consent cannot be provided in writing it is good practice to record any consent to onward disclosure e.g. in a note or by way of a letter to the student.

2.5 Where such consent is not forthcoming, the person entrusted with the information should make it clear that in exceptional circumstances, it may be necessary to disclose the information to others.
Duty of Care

2.6 Notwithstanding specific legislation and the expectation of an individual who provides information in confidence, the University and its colleges must bear in mind that in certain circumstances they may owe a duty of care to individuals that cannot be discharged unless the institution takes action on information provided in confidence. It is not possible to provide an exact delineation of the extent of such a duty of care. However where, for example, information concerns potential harm to an individual or to others, the institution must weigh the duty of confidentiality against that potential harm.

Seeking advice

2.7 Those to whom information has been given in confidence, or who have acquired information which they regard as confidential, may not always be sure whether they should disclose this information or not. In these circumstances it may be sensible to seek advice from an appropriate person e.g. a college officer, the college doctor or the University’s Student Counselling Service, on whether the matter is sufficiently important to breach confidentiality, and, if so, to whom they should report their concerns. This should be done without divulging the name of the student concerned.

Promises of confidentiality

2.8 It is not always appropriate or sensible to give absolute assurances of confidentiality to those who may wish to talk about personal problems. It may be necessary to say that information may be shared with others who need to know it, if this is in the best interests of the individual and/or others in the community, and that this will be carried out with the utmost discretion. Persons with both pastoral and disciplinary responsibilities may need to say in particular that matters of a disciplinary nature may need to be discussed with others.

Discussion with college doctors, college nurses and the Student Counselling Service

2.9 It is often helpful for tutors or others to talk to college doctors, college nurses or members of the University's Student Counselling Service about undergraduate or graduate students’ difficulties; the individual's consent to do so should be sought.

• If consent is not forthcoming, it may still be helpful to seek general advice from the doctor, nurse or counsellor without identifying the student concerned.
• In exceptional circumstances college doctors, college nurses and counsellors may wish to speak to the senior members of a college about a student. If the student is unwilling, confidentiality will be respected unless there are reasons not to within the relevant professional guidelines (see section 2 below).
• The Student Counselling Service’s Liaison Scheme, whereby colleges may elect to have a named counsellor with whom they can liaise, is specifically designed so that college members can seek the advice of someone who is familiar with the college context.

Contact with families

2.10 It is generally inappropriate to speak to a student's family against the student's wishes. Contact may occasionally be justified in the students' best interests e.g. when a student is at risk of self-harm or suffering from a serious physical illness and the student has been assessed as lacking capacity to make the decision. The decision to do so should be made at the highest level and the student should normally be informed.
Students on professional courses

2.11 Special considerations apply to students on courses leading to qualifications for professions governed by codes of conduct and health intended to protect the public e.g. medicine, social work and teaching. Any concerns about the health or behaviour of a student on one of these courses may be discussed with the department concerned, in the first instance without divulging the name of the student. Advice may also be sought from the college doctor or the Head of the Student Counselling Service.

2.12 The General Medical Council (GMC) expects medical students to be open and honest about any conditions which might affect their ability to study or practice and to engage readily in any assessment or monitoring. Non-disclosure is likely to be viewed adversely when problems do become apparent. The Associate Director of Pre-clinical Studies [Health & Welfare] is available to support medical students with welfare issues and provide advice.

3. Professional guidelines

Doctors and their professional colleagues

3.1 There are explicit and strict guidelines on medical confidentiality which are codified by the General Medical Council. Doctors have the discretion to share information with other members of the healthcare team, for example, college nurses. There are limited exceptions to confidentiality – statutory and in the public interest. The General Medical Council states:

"Disclosures may be necessary in the public interest where a failure to disclose information may expose the patient, or others, to risk of death or serious harm. In such circumstances you should disclose information promptly to an appropriate person or authority."

Student Welfare and Support Services

3.2 The Student Counselling Service is an organisational member of the British Association for Counselling and Psychotherapy and abides by its Ethical Framework for Good Practice. Confidentiality remains with the staff of Student Welfare and Support Services and information will not normally be conveyed to others without permission. If a student were considered to be a danger to him/herself or to others then the student's consent would still be sought before information was conveyed to others. If this consent were not given then a counsellor would consult with a senior member of the team before a decision to break confidentiality was taken. The impact on the member of staff's future therapeutic relationship with the student would also be taken into consideration. Any breach of confidentiality would be minimised by restricting the information conveyed both to that which is pertinent to the immediate situation and to those persons who can provide the help required by the student.

3.3 The Disability Advisory Service will share confidential information related to declared disability for the purposes of supporting that student wish the written consent of the student.
Chaplains

3.4 College and denominational chaplains, as ministers of religion, operate with strict ethical codes regarding information disclosed to them in confidence, whether in formal situations of sacramental confession or in less formal pastoral work. Like counsellors and doctors, they may very occasionally be required to divulge information given in confidence. It is necessary to distinguish between the Chaplain functioning with spiritual concerns and when they are functioning as a member of the College welfare team. Ministers may themselves have a confidential supervisor, confessor, or spiritual director, with whom they discuss their pastoral work. Because chaplains are members of the same communities in which they exercise pastoral care, students often encounter them in a variety of social settings. Confusion can result as to the exact status of a conversation and the information imparted in these circumstances. A chaplain should make clear the understanding of confidentiality within which he or she works.

Others subject to specific confidentiality requirements

3.5 Other statements about confidentiality are made in relation to the work of those involved in harassment and other professional areas, for example financial hardship. All of these have recognised both the importance of privacy and the need to specify exceptions. For example, the Guidance for Advisers in Cases of Harassment gives assurances about written records and about respect for confidentiality, circumstances in which complainants will be urged to make formal complaints and the exceptional circumstances in which information will be passed on to others.

Disclosures to the police

3.6 If the police ask for information to be disclosed to them in the course of an investigation there is no automatic obligation to provide the information to them without first obtaining the student’s consent. Both Section 29(3) Data Protection Act 1998 and Article 23 of The General Data Protection Regulation (EU 2016/679) exempt personal data from the non-disclosure provisions within the Act where disclosure is required for the prevention of crime or apprehension or prosecution of offenders and seeking an individual’s consent will prejudice the enquiry. However both do not compel disclosure and decisions about whether or not to disclose information should be considered carefully. Factors such as the seriousness of the offence will be relevant. If it is decided that a degree of disclosure is appropriate this should be limited to the minimum required. If staff are unsure what to do in these circumstances, they should contact the University’s Legal Services Office for advice.

4. University and College policies

4.1 For legal and more general reasons it is important that the University and colleges set out statements about privacy and confidentiality. Whilst it is entirely appropriate that there is variation in the details of application, there are strong legal and practical reasons for the documents to be based on the same explicit principles. College statements should be made available to both students and staff. It may also be helpful for colleges to inform parents or guardians of the principles that will be followed with regard to confidentiality.

4.2 Written policies provide reassurance for individuals in discussing personal and private matters but also enable all those involved to be aware of the limits of confidentiality and how they will be handled. They should cover the following:

- the general principle of privacy and respect for confidentiality; compliance with the General Data Protection Regulation (EU 2016/679);
that a general duty of care means that institutions must consider the welfare of all members who may be affected by individual behaviour;

- the nature of professional guidelines for college doctors and for others involved in professional health care;

- a statement that whilst assurances about absolute confidentiality cannot be given in respect to personal discussions between student and senior members, information will only be disclosed in exceptional circumstances and on a need to know basis;

- that all undergraduate and graduate students are entitled to confidentiality; families will not normally be contacted without consent;

- an explanation that it is often helpful for personal matters to be discussed between members of colleges or the University and also with those providing professional care; reassurance that:
  - discussion of students' distress or personal problems should not in general be seen as resulting in adverse academic, employment or other consequences and
  - discussions of students' academic progress will generally be confined to exchange of information on issues relating to educational performance and discipline;

- the availability of personal advice and an explanation of who may be informed about important matters;

- an explanation of procedures for giving advice and helping with financial hardship;

- that whilst consultation between senior members may be necessary, this will be carried out with discretion.

Who should be informed?

4.3 It is appropriate for the central University and for colleges to set out the ways in which confidential information may be shared. Colleges should specify who may be informed about health, welfare and disciplinary problems, whether minor or major. Although it is important to identify those members of college who may be informed about such problems it should also be made clear that not all of them will necessarily have a need to know in all cases. Who is informed in each case will depend on the particular circumstances and individual judgment will be required. The general principles should, for practical and legal reasons, be uniform throughout the University; the precise application must reflect the nature of the college or other body.

4.4 It is important that this should take account of the involvement of all members of college staff, the lines of responsibility, and the ways in which students should seek advice and support in relation to their peers. There should be publicised procedures available twenty-four hours a day.

Working with others

4.5 A formal or informal college welfare committee is often the best way to work out and monitor procedures and to discuss general issues. Graduate students who spend less time in college may feel more isolated and it may be necessary for their department/faculty to remind them of the help available, both within the department/faculty and, more generally, within their college and the University's Student Counselling Service and OUSU.
5. Specific problems

Major behavioural and emotional problems

5.1 In the event that a student’s behaviour is such that they are considered to pose a risk to staff or students within the collegiate University, the senior member responsible for college welfare should act in the public interest. Where there is time to consider action, it is important to seek the confidential advice and help of the college doctor or the University Marshall (when matters of safety are of concern).

5.2 If a student’s behaviour is such that they are considered to pose a risk to themself they should be encouraged to engage with their GP in the first instance. Where the student is a significant risk of harm to themselves and failing to take steps to maintain their welfare (including not engaging with health professionals) it may be necessary to contact the emergency services. Where time permits it is important to seek the confidential advice and help of the college doctor.

5.3 If a student is causing considerable concern but is not considered to pose a risk to other members of the college or department and they are unwilling to consult the college doctor or to allow a senior member to consult the college doctor, a senior member with pastoral experience may well be able to achieve a satisfactory solution. Alternatively a senior member may wish to contact the Director of Student Welfare and Support Services or Head of the Student Counselling Service to discuss possible sources of help.

Discipline and ill health

5.4 The University and colleges have formal procedures for dealing with serious problems arising from ill health which come to light in the course of a disciplinary investigation or otherwise. University departments and/or colleges must ensure that any decision to share sensitive personal data is in accordance with the provisions of the General Data Protection Regulation (EU 2016/679). Please refer to the University or college Fitness to Study procedure for more information.

Discharge from hospital

5.5 Hospital staff can be expected to contact general practitioners about students discharged from the emergency department or inpatient wards with significant medical problems. It is the responsibility of hospital staff to ensure a ‘safe’ discharge and this may include communication with the college or family to which the patient will be discharged, subject to the patient giving permission to share information. The college Doctor, together with college nurse, are likely to ask the patient to give permission to share information. Student patients will often be willing for hospital or college doctors to speak to college senior members as appropriate.
Risk of self-harm

5.6 If it appears that a student is at risk of self-harm concerns should be reported to a senior member of the college with pastoral responsibilities. It is often sensible to discuss these concerns directly with the student. The college doctor or Student Counselling Service should be consulted. Even when the doctor or counsellor is unable to comment about a particular case for reasons of confidentiality, it can be useful to discuss general issues. Since self-harming activity can vary in its level of immediate danger, discussion with a professional is important to assess what action is needed. Where there are clear indications that the student is in imminent and serious danger a doctor should be consulted as quickly as possible and if necessary the emergency services contacted.

5.7 When students have been admitted to the John Radcliffe Hospital following self-harm they will routinely receive a psychiatric assessment which will be shared with the student’s GP. College doctors and nurses will consider further care, including the implications for the college and other students. If, additionally, a student is referred to the Student Counselling Service after assessment at the John Radcliffe Hospital the service would expect to receive the same discharge information as the college doctor.

Serious crime

5.8 Victims of serious crime, including sexual crime may fear reporting the matter to the police. Advice should be sought on how to support victims in such circumstances and on the details of confidential referral routes. The University’s Equality and Diversity Unit, OUSU’s Advice and Information Service or the Proctors’ Office are able to provide this advice and information.

5.9 Victims of serious crime can seek advice from the University Safety Office or approach the Police directly.

5.10 All information concerning sexual assault and sexual violence should be treated in confidence, and information should only be shared with consent of the individual and on a need-to-know basis. Sharing of information with consent will be limited to staff in order for support to be put in place, and the purpose of sharing should be explained to the individual. In such cases advice can be sought from the Director of Student Welfare and support Service.

5.11 There may be circumstances in which confidentiality cannot be maintained e.g. where there is concern of serious harm to the individual (e.g. failure to seek suitable medical support) or others. In such cases the college’s duty of care must be considered. Decisions on sharing information without consent must be made at a senior level (e.g. Head of House), seeking specialist legal advice as appropriate.

6. Dealing with the media

It is important that all members of staff of the college and University should be careful about speaking to the media and this is particularly so when there is a risk that confidential or sensitive personal data might be inadvertently disclosed. Trinity’s Head of Communications, Julia Paolitto (Julia.paolitto@trinity.ox.ac.uk or 01865 279868) should be consulted about who should respond to enquiries and should be deferred to. In cases of student death the Student Tragedy guidance should be followed.
7. Dealing with requests from family members

7.1 It is inappropriate to speak to a student’s family against the student’s wishes. In such circumstances, contact can only be justified where the student is physically incapacitated (e.g. unconscious due to serious accident) or the student has been medically assessed as lacking capacity to make the decision. As a general rule, where a student presents a risk to self but has capacity (e.g. self harm), any decision that family members should not be contacted should be respected.

7.2 There may be times when family members contact the college on behalf of the student. Whilst providing advice and a response might seem the most helpful response, students are adults and the confidentiality of their data must be maintained.

7.3 Some parents or partners of students with disabilities are actively involved in their support, where consent has already been obtained.

7.4 Where family members raise concerns for a student’s welfare it is appropriate to inform them of channels of support that are available to all students (e.g. college doctor, welfare contact in college, counselling service). Staff should advise family members that information provided in relation to the students will not normally be acted upon, and that they should encourage the student to disclose this information themselves and seek help. In cases where a family member discloses information which indicates that an individual is at risk of serious harm, the university/college must act upon this information and communicate that it will not be possible to guarantee anonymity to the disclosing party.

7.5 Separate considerations apply to students under the age of 18. Further advice should be sought from Safeguarding Leads where appropriate.
